To do that, we needed to build an interface that allowed users to specify which code should be executed at what time, with which configuration. YAML and notebooks are both tools for that purpose, in a sense. A notebook, at a very basic level, is just a bunch of JSON that references blocks of code and the order in which they should be executed.

The people we need to help are people who we once relied on. The elders who supported us through out our years, the ones who brought us into the world, the ones who gave us an opportunity to know everything we know now. We need to be there for them. It is our turn to help them. Many of them cannot fend for themselves during this pandemic.
